City Entelligence. SATURDAY, Jan. 14.

CIRCUIT COURT .- Before Judge Kent. David Moore vs. John Craig - This was an action to recover damages for the violation, by defendant, of a young girl named Elizabeth Moore, (daughter of plaintiff,) loss of service caused by her illness, &c. The outrage tock place at No. 123 Warren-street, on Sunday, the 17th of April last, during the absence of plaintiff and his wife on a visit to a sick friend at Staten Island, and complaint subsequently made at the Police Office. Craig gave bail for his appear. ance at the Sessions, but permitted his recognizances to be forfeited. The parties are from the North of Ireland, and appear to be respectable. Effort was made on the trial, by usel for defendant, to show that much drinking had been going ou; but the facts proved are, that, before the outrage, a young man went out and got a small quantity of gin to 'treat' a 'emale cousin that had called to see Elizabeth, but that the latter did not drink any of it. After the cousin had gone, Craig, as if in sport, pushed Elizabeth isto a back bed room. They were affianced in marriage, and she did not apprehend any danger. They had previously stood at the head of the stairs, bidding the cousin good-bye. Craig locked the door, and on her attempting to leave the bed room, seized her round the neck with one arm, putting his hand over her mouth, and after a desperate struggle, during which she fainted, succeeded in effecting his diabolical purpose. A little sister of Elizabeth's, about 13 years of age when going up stairs on her return from Sunday School, heard Elizabeth crying, and tried to open the door, but Cralg told her that she could not come in. He spoke, she said, as if "all out of breath." The girls were induced, by the urgent solicitation of Craig, not to tell their parents, as be assured Elizabeth he intended to marry her. In two e three weeks it was ascertained that detendant had married another girl. Elizabeth was confined to her bed, (not hav ing, as she stated, known a well day since,) and finally told her mother what had occurred. Several witnesses were examined, and the case will be resumed to-day.

These two wretched women, one of whom (Bloomfield) received $10 a week for the rest of the premises from Maxwell the keeper, were ordered by Justhe Merritt to find bail, in the suni of $1,000, to be of good behaviour; and in default, they were committed to prison on Thursday last. Their cases were brought before this Court this morning, and Justice Merritt appeared and conducted the exemination on the part of the prosecution, and Coansellor Peck for the defence. After a full hearing of the facts of the case, the Court convicted the frail women of the disorderly conduct charged, and sentenced them each to the Penitentiary for 6 months.

The effect produced upon our market by this auspicious news, was such as we have rarely seen in this speculative city. Immediately it became known an animated demand sprung up, and by 9 o'clock about 5000 bales of cotton had sprung up, and by 9 o'clock about 5000 bales of cotton had changed hands, at Saturday's prices. By this time the accounts began to be properly appreciated, and factors insisted on an advance, which was quickly acceded to, and the balance of the day's business was done at an imprevement of ½ ½ per lb. The anxiety to purchase vas so great, that it scarcely received any check from a farther advance in freight, which are now current at ½1. to Liverpool, and 19. to Havre. The total transactions of the day embrace 19.250 bales, of which between 5000 and 6000 were taken by speculators. With a small exception, this heavy business has been allogether transacted on English account.

hands to day, at the full prices of yesterday for middling and lower qualities. Some small loss of the finer descriptions brought little if any advances on the ra The market is stiff, however, in the face of reights and declining rates of exchange. The "Faugh-a-Bailagh" is the celebrated and characteristic. Irish motto, meaning 'clear the way!' It is a bold undertaking, that on which Mr. Maxwell has ventured, of flinging down the glove of rivairy straight at the feet of the author of Charles O'Malley; but he has done so bolding and bravely. He has brought forward on his stage a young Irishman, who seems to be the full incarnation of the wild and warm genius of his country; he has given him a body-guard to match, and a commission in the Twenty-first Fusi-leers; and has fairly started him forth on the world as a sol-dier of fortune, which in general, as we need not be told, signifies in Ireland, as every where else, a soldier of no for tune. The first five numbers, all that have yet appeared, promise capitally for the sequel; and though we took them up with a pshaw of impatience at having to read them for an opinion about them, we intend to read the future ones as last as they come out, for their own sake, for the funthat is a them."

He was a native of Granville county, for many years a resident of Rockingham, then of Chapel Hill, and finally of the county where he died. Coming of age about the beginning of the Revolution, he was much involved in the stirring scenes that ensued. He bore the Commissions first of Sergeant then of Lieutenant, and then of Major in General Green's Army, and was accounted a brave man and every efficient officer. He was an officer in command of the eral Green's Army, and was accorded to compared of the troops that guarded the Commissioners who ran the dividing one between Tennessee and Kentucky in 1779, a duty of great peril, as nearly the whole extest was occupied by hostile savages. He was the companion and friend of Danright for nearly the whole of the "Henderson Reserve," and finally lost to his heirs by some kind of legal chicancry.—Major Henderson was the private Secretary of Gov. A. Martin, and for nearly Severas chief Clerk of the House of Commons in this State. These several positions, as well as is long residence at the University, made him extensively equalitied with the distinguished men of our own State ad with a great many from other States, by most of whom ever knew of whom I never heard evil spoken.
